Edgar Filing: AGIC Equity & Convertible Income Fund - Form N-CSRS

Dear Shareholder:

The fiscal six-month period ended July 31, 2010, was marked by renewed turbulence in the financial markets, with most asset classes rising and falling, and moving in and out of favor, as investors navigated through a thicket of economic news, much of which appeared to be negative.

Economic indicators pointed conclusively to a U.S. economy that was running out of steam. After expanding as much as 5.0% on an annual basis at the end of 2009, gross domestic product (GDP) slowed to a 3.7% pace between January and March 2010, and a 2.4% rate between April and June 2010. Foreclosures continued to rise, pressuring the unstable housing market. Unemployment, while regarded as a lagging economic indicator, hovered at just under 10%. Meanwhile, Americans retrenched, saving more and paying off debt. This was not positive for the overall economy, which is heavily dependent on consumer spending.

All of this was accompanied by a steady succession of warnings. A double-dip recession was possible, as was deflation – a downward spiral of prices and wages. Investors responded by shifting out of riskier asset classes such as corporate bonds and small-cap stocks and into investments perceived as safer, namely U.S. Treasury bonds. Treasuries, which had fallen out of favor during the first half of the reporting period, surged.

The slowing economy indicated that interest rates were not likely to increase any time soon. Indeed, the Federal Reserve (the Fed) maintained the widely-watched Federal Funds Rate – the interest rate banks charge to lend federal funds to other banks, usually on an overnight basis – in the 0.0% to 0.25% range. In February, when it appeared as if things were improving, the Fed did raise the discount-rate – the interest rate charged to banks for direct loans – 25 basis points to 0.75%. Policymakers also warned of a long, uphill slog for the economy, indicating it could take as long as six years for it to return to what they regard as normal. It was also mentioned that new stimulus measures may be necessary if conditions were to worsen appreciably.

Six Months in Review

For the fiscal six-month period ended July 31, 2010:

NFJ Dividend, Interest & Premium Strategy Fund returned 3.28% on net asset value ( NAV ) and 3.73% on market price.

AGIC Equity & Convertible Income Fund returned 2.77% on net asset value and 6.58% on market price. Effective August 25, 2010, the Fund's name changed from Nicholas-Applegate Equity & Convertible Income Fund.

In contrast, the Russell 3000 Index, a broad measure of U.S. stock market performance, rose 4.23%. The Russell 1000 Value Index, a measure of large-cap value-style stocks, returned 4.24%; while its growth-style counterpart, the Russell 1000 Growth Index, gained 3.46%. Meanwhile, convertible securities, as reflected by the Merrill Lynch All Convertibles Index, advanced 5.92% during the period.

Positioned To Face Today's Challenges

Forecasting what will happen to the economy and financial markets is just that – forecasting. There are no guarantees. There is one thing, however, of which we are confident: the renewed market volatility experienced of late is likely to be with us for a while. The economy is likely to remain weak for the near future, and it will be a struggle for the markets to regain their footing. As they often do, the markets may fluctuate sometimes sharply – on even a snippet of news, good or bad.

Although the U.S. economy is slowing down, it has nevertheless grown for four consecutive quarters – not because of robust underlying conditions, but in spite of them. This is not insignificant. It is important to remember that we are just a year or so removed from what was arguably the worst downturn since the 1930s. It will take time – and most likely a few more fits and starts – before we can say with complete confidence that we are out of the woods.

NFJ Dividend, Interest & Premium Strategy Fund Fund Insights

July 31, 2010 (unaudited)

For the fiscal six-month period ended July 31, 2010, NFJ Dividend, Interest & Premium Strategy Fund returned 3.28% on net asset value and 3.73% on market price.

U.S. equities traced a rolling path during the period, advancing, then declining and then rallying again en route to moderate gains. Entering the reporting period, the equity market had staged an impressive rally. It turned down sharply midway through the period, as concerns about the sustainability of global economic growth and monetary weakness in Europe combined to fuel investors' risk aversion. Although corporations continued to report earnings improvement and growing cash balances, signs of a fragile recovery persisted in stagnant employment growth and deteriorating confidence. Among large-cap value stocks, as represented by the Russell 1000 Value Index, all sectors except health care and energy posted positive returns. Index constituents in the consumer discretionary, financials and industrials sectors contributed most significantly to overall gains for the index. Stocks in the health care and energy sectors underperformed the index return.

In the equity portion of the Fund, stock selection decisions in the energy, industrials and consumer discretionary sectors detracted from performance. Fund holdings in the consumer discretionary, materials and financials sectors contributed positively to returns.

Within the energy sector, the BP Gulf oil spill contributed to an adverse environment for companies involved in the exploration and production of offshore oil and gas reserves. The Fund's position in contractor Diamond Offshore fell after analysts cut earnings and price targets for most offshore drillers in the wake of the BP Horizon well failure in the Gulf. Integrated oil and gas companies fared relatively better during the period as a result of improving refinery margins and the outlook for higher gasoline demand that accompanies the summer driving season. Shares of integrated oil giant Total SA underperformed in this environment, as the company's refinery throughput declined and improvements in Total's quarterly earnings lagged those of others in the group.

In industrials, RR Donnelley shares fell as the firm's credit deteriorated, approaching a below-investment-grade rating. The industrial printer has steadily increased debt over the last decade, buying up smaller companies to increase efficiency and share. But with demand for publishing services down and customers increasingly turning to paperless applications the outlook has dimmed. Defense contractor Lockheed Martin saw its stock price fall after the company reported weak margins in its information systems and global services segment.

In the consumer staples sector, tobacco company stocks outperformed the sector average after the U.S. Supreme Court opted not to hear an appeal over whether tobacco makers concealed smoking dangers. In so doing, the high court rejected an effort to require the industry to fund a mega-billion dollar government campaign to curb smoking. This benefited the Fund's positions in market leaders Altria and Reynolds.

After a strong start, the convertible markets declined in the second half of the period giving back some early gains. Much of the weakness was generated from news overseas. European shares declined, as budget deficit concerns cascaded into sovereign debt downgrades, economic austerity and anti-government protests. The Euro declined to a four-year low against the dollar, gold prices rose to record highs and Treasury yields fell to record lows. In addition to the European debt crisis, sluggish economic news in the U.S. sparked concern over prospects for a double-dip recession. Economic activity decelerated throughout the second half of the period with private employers adding fewer jobs than anticipated and housing sales reports reflecting still-sluggish conditions.

Leadership shifted abruptly within the convertibles market during the period. Issues in the industrials, materials and consumer discretionary industries figured prominently both among the leaders of the rally that opened the period and among the laggards of the period's closing months. Likewise, speculative-grade and smaller cap securities outperformed at the beginning of the period but underperformed at the end. Conversely, utilities convertible securities lagged in the opening months of the period and outperformed at the end of the period.

The Fund's positions in convertible securities in the energy industry hindered relative performance during the reporting period as low natural gas prices and a government imposed drilling moratorium following the BP Horizon well failure caused investor sentiment to remain subdued.

NFJ Dividend, Interest & Premium Strategy Fund Fund Insights

The Fund's positions in convertible securities in the financials and health care industries contributed positively to performance during the period. Within health care, both branded and generic pharmaceuticals makers benefited from improving fundamentals early in the period, as better visibility of earnings translated into gains in bond prices. A pickup in merger and acquisition activity later in the period helped solidify improvement for the group. Among financials companies, a lower level of charge-offs and improving expectations boosted returns at the beginning of the period. Lower borrowing costs for real estate investment trusts ( REITs ) in the closing weeks contributed to outperformance for the Fund's REIT holdings.

- (1) Past performance is no guarantee of future results. Total return is calculated by determining the percentage change in net asset value ( NAV ) or market price (as applicable) in the specified period. The calculation assumes that all income dividends and capital gain distributions if any, have been reinvested. Total return does not reflect broker commissions or sales charges. Total return for a period of less than one year is not annualized. Total return for a period of more than one year represents the average annual total return.

Performance at market price will differ from its results at NAV. Although market price returns typically reflect investment results over time, during shorter periods returns at market price can also be influenced by factors such as changing views about the Fund, market conditions, supply and demand for the Fund's shares, or changes in Fund dividends.

Edgar Filing: AGIC Equity & Convertible Income Fund - Form N-CSRS

An investment in the Fund involves risk, including the loss of principal. Total return, market price, market yield and NAV will fluctuate with changes in market conditions. This data is provided for information purposes only and is not intended for trading purposes. Closed-end funds, unlike open-end funds, are not continuously offered. There is a onetime public offering and once issued, shares of closed-end funds are traded in the open market through a stock exchange. NAV is equal to total assets less total liabilities divided by the number of shares outstanding. Holdings are subject to change daily.

- (2) Market Price Yield is determined by dividing the annualized current quarterly per share dividend (comprised of net investment income and short-term capital gains, if any) payable to shareholders by the market price per share at July 31, 2010.

AGIC Equity & Convertible Income Fund Fund Insights

July 31, 2010 (unaudited)

For the fiscal six-month period ended July 31, 2010, AGIC Equity & Convertible Income Fund returned 2.77% on net asset value and 6.58% on market price.

U.S. equities traced a rolling path during the period, advancing, then declining and then rallying again en route to moderate gains. Among large-cap growth stocks, represented by the Russell 1000 Growth Index, all sectors except energy, utilities and health care posted positive returns. Entering the period, the equity market had staged an impressive rally. It turned down sharply midway through the period, as concerns about the sustainability of global economic growth and monetary weakness in Europe combined to fuel investors' risk aversion. Although corporations continued to report earnings improvement and growing cash balances, signs of a fragile recovery persisted in stagnant employment growth and deteriorating confidence.

Security selection decisions in the energy and health care sectors detracted from performance versus the benchmark, as did an underweighting of the industrials sector. Security selections among financials companies and an underweighting in the consumer staples sector contributed positively to returns.

In the financials sector, the Fund's equity positions in insurers outperformed the benchmark's sector constituents, which are weighted toward more economically sensitive money-center banks and capital markets companies. Within the energy sector, the Gulf of Mexico oil spill contributed to an adverse environment for companies involved in the exploration and production of offshore oil and gas reserves. The Fund's equity position in one offshore drilling contractor detracted from returns after analysts cut earnings and price targets for the group in the wake of the BP Horizon well failure. The Fund's equity positions in biopharmaceutical and medical device companies also detracted from relative performance during the period, as investors remained cautious of the effects of the national health insurance overhaul legislation.

After a strong start, the convertible market declined in the second half of the period giving back some of its early gains. Much of the weakness was generated from news overseas. European shares declined, as budget deficit concerns cascaded into sovereign debt downgrades, economic austerity and anti-government protests. The Euro declined to a four-year low against the dollar, gold prices rose to record highs and Treasury yields fell to record lows. In addition to the European debt crisis, sluggish economic news in the U.S. sparked concern over prospects for a double-dip recession. Economic activity decelerated throughout the second half of the period with private employers adding fewer jobs than anticipated and housing sales reports reflecting still-sluggish conditions.

Issues in the industrials, materials and consumer discretionary industries figured prominently both among the leaders of the rally that opened the period and among the laggards of the period's closing months. Likewise, speculative-grade and smaller cap securities outperformed at the beginning of the period but underperformed at the end. Conversely, utilities industry convertible securities lagged in the opening months of the period and outperformed at the end of the period.

The convertibles new issuance market remained slow during the reporting period. Many companies accessed the corporate debt market instead of the convertible debt market in order to avoid shareholder dilution.

The Fund's positions in convertible securities in the financials and health care industries contributed positively to performance during the period. Within health care, both branded and generic pharmaceuticals makers benefited from improving fundamentals early in the period, as better visibility of earnings translated into gains in bond prices. A pickup in merger and acquisition activity later in the period helped solidify improvement for the group. Among financials companies, a lower level of charge-offs and improving expectations boosted returns at the beginning of the period. Lower borrowing costs for real estate investment trusts (REITs) in the closing weeks contributed to outperformance for the Fund's REIT holdings.

The Fund's positions in convertible securities in the energy industry hindered performance during the reporting period, as low natural gas prices and a government imposed drilling moratorium following the BP Horizon well failure caused investor sentiment to remain subdued on the group.

Expectations of market volatility, as measured by the Chicago Board Options Exchange Volatility Index (VIX), opened and closed the period at relatively low levels, 24.6 and 23.5, respectively. However, in late May the barometer spiked to 46.4, its highest level in more than a year. With the increase in index-level volatility, single-company call option premiums remained attractive, and the Fund opportunistically captured premiums throughout the period.
